How to use the Price Guide:

Customer Support:

Turn to the section you require. On the side of the pages you will see different coloured Headings, below these are Sub-Headings for individual product categories (highlighted in the same colour as the main section you are browsing). A white dot on the individual Sub Header shows which product category you are browsing. This allows easy navigation to other product types in this category.

Pricing Format:

We've created a prices coded 'Rate' system for any items that are not consumables. This will assist in disguising your prices. Any consumable items (i.e. not for resale), have the standard list price instead of the 'Rate'.

Index:

The Price Guide catalogue has the option of looking up a product by its item number or by the product type 'description'. Browse the Index pages at the back of the catalogue for quick reference.

Now, simply connect the Smart Dongle to your Pro tester and it will automatically configure itself for the vehicle it is connected to.

- ✓ Automatic configuration for the vehicle it is connected to
- ✓ Easy to use
- ✓ Has replaced security calculator and is in effect now one automatic configurable dongle

SIZE GUIDE

REBATE KITS

A=Rebate Size

Rebate Kits are essential to ensure correct closing on double doors with an overlap (rebate).

The term 'rebated doors' is used to describe a set of two doors which have been cut, or rebated, into one another. To do this, half of the 'thickness' of the face of each door is channelled out, so that when they close the doors interlock into one another.

INTRODUCTION

Over the past 20 years or so millions of uPVC doors have been fitted throughout the UK – people had become fed up with endlessly painting and repairing old wooden doors and were looking to upgrade security, due in a large part to the increasing number of house burglaries.

uPVC double glazing soon became the popular choice for householders looking to replace doors and windows. They were drawn to the fact that “it’s plastic and therefore it doesn’t rot”, nor does it need any paint or varnish. Plus uPVC has added security – doors that lock in multiple positions (without having to bend down/reach up to fasten the old fashion bolts or latches on wooden doors).

The only problem with uPVC doors is that if the lock fails it takes time to track down that specific part, it’s not just a case of nipping down to the local DIY store and picking a lock or handle that looks like it might fit. uPVC is much more complex, firstly there are hundreds of different locks out there and to a certain extent one will not fit in another’s place (unlike wood where you can just chisel a bit more of the door out).

Here at Davenport Burgess we have made it our business to source the best possible range of uPVC door locks. We aim to make the complex business of identifying multipoint locks simple, by following our guide, however if you’re still unsure as to which lock you require simply give us a call on 01902 366 448 and a member of the sales team will be more than happy to assist you in identifying your lock.

Backplate

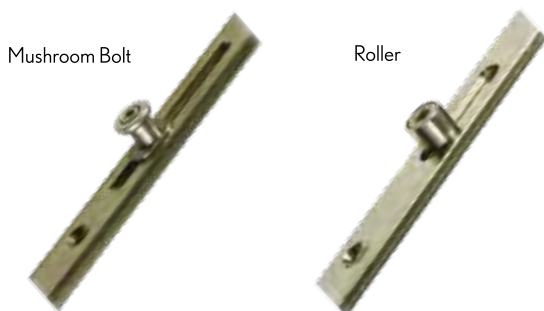

The element of the handle that is fixed to the door. Back plates can be face fixed, i.e. the inner and outer handle screw into the face of the door independently, though most multipoint handles use bolt through handles, where the outer back plate has a screw lug for receiving the screw fixing from the inner handle.

Backset

The dimension from the lock faceplate to the centre line of the cylinder or keyhole. (This definition is different for traditional mortice locks)

Cams (Rollers / Mushrooms)

Rollers are often used for weathersealing on PVCu doors; and are a cylindrical shape. They generally also offer an adjustment feature to enable the compression of the sash against the frame to achieve the appropriate weather seal. Mushrooms have an element that inter locks within its keep to provide separation resistance of the sash from the frame.

Centre

The dimension between the lock spindle and the centre of the keyway of the gearbox. Centres can vary between lock systems, though typically, the UK standard is 92mm. Older lock types do have different centres. Understanding the lock centre dimension is critical for specification of the correct handle. See also Offset Spindle configuration.

Faceplate (Face Bar)

The metal part of the lock that is visible on the edge of the door leaf. These can vary in width to suit the application. 16mm is typical for PVCu to suit the euro groove channel, 20mm is common for timber and composite doors.

Hooks

Hooks provide a steadfast locking point for a door. When thrown they extend into the keep and due to their shape and the geometry of movement, engage behind the keep plate to provide anti separation. Some multi-point locks have hooks that throw/move in the same direction, and whilst this provides resistance to horizontal separation, there is less resistance to lifting the door. Bi-directional hooks (movement in opposite directions) provide the optimum security as they effectively clasp the leaf into the outer frame.

Keeps / Strikers

Keeps are fitted to the door frame and the moving parts of the lock (hook, linear bolt or cam) locates into these when in the locked position. They often feature adjustable plates or pockets to allow for adjustment of the door once fitted. Keeps for roller cams usually feature a chamfered (angled) edge, to guide them into the keep (reducing the closing force required).

Latch (Sash Bolt)

The chamfered part of the lock is usually in the central gearbox, which initially engages to hold the door in the closed position when shut. The latch is spring loaded and retracts when it makes contact with the striking edge of the keep, and then extends when aligned within the keep. Latches are typically deadlocked once the lock is fully engaged (locked) and are reversible by removing the screws on the external face of the latch and then the rotating latch-screws are then re-inserted.

Latch Top / Hook Bolt

Latch Top / Deadbolt

Lever Handles

The rotating operating element of the handle. Handle designs can vary from plain straight levers, to decorative swan neck, twist and contemporary designs. Additionally, extended levers can be used for disability complaint applications to reduce operating forces of the lock operation.

Lever Handle

Lever Pad Handle

A handle type, typically used with offset or split spindle operation (though not exclusively) that is designed to mimic a traditional knob aesthetically, whilst having conventional lever operation.

Pad Handle

Linear Bolts

Linear bolts extend horizontally into the keep, with greater penetration than a roller and can be effective for door sets with small gaps (4mm or less) between the frame and the door.

Nightlatch Function On A Multi-Point Lock

Gives the option for the entry into the house from outside requiring a key, even when the lock has not been fully engaged, this is to replicate the operation of a traditional nightlatch.

Offset Spindle

An alternative mechanism to the split spindle for providing a nightlatch function. An offset spindle lock has two drives, one of which retracts the bolts/rollers/hooks and latch, and one that will only retract the bolts and not the latch. Typically in the UK the centres are set at 92 mm and 62mm. Used in conjunction with a handle where the inner and outer levers or pads are offset, so that the external handle will not retract the latch, the night latching function is achieved.

Spindle

The square section drive bar, usually 8mm in width, which is positioned through the drive of the lock and locates into the handle set levers, or pads. Rotation of the lever/pad rotates the spindle, which in turn operates the drive (follower) of the lock. The length of the spindle is dependent upon the thickness of the door and depth of the handles lever.

Single Spindle Lock Case

Double Spindle Lock Case

Split Spindle

Gives you the nightlatch function on certain types of locks. The spindle is split, so that depressing the handle on the outside of the door does not retract the latch.

Sprung / Unsprung (Lock Case and Handles)

Multipoint lock gearboxes can be either sprung or unsprung. With a sprung gearbox, the drive mechanism is spring loaded, so that when the lever is depressed and released, the handle and latch are returned to their original (at rest) position by the spring within the gearbox.

Unsprung gearboxes require the use of sprung handles (handle sets with spring cassettes) to return the lock drive from the depressed position, thus re-engaging the latch. Spring cassettes are also used in certain handles, where the weight of the lever is too great to allow the integral spring within the gear box to operate effectively in isolation. This is typically the case with solid cast levers and extended levers for disability use.

SNIB

A plastic part on the lock that allows the latch to be held in its withdrawn position, thus preventing it engaging within the keep. This is normally used in conjunction with a nightlatch (lever/pad) facility to temporarily prevent the door from being locked when closed.

GEARBOX SIZE GUIDE

On many locking mechanisms it is possible to change just the centre gearbox rather than the whole strip, and as they are fixed on by a couple of bolts its a relatively straightforward job to do. We have gearboxes available to replace many makes including GU, Era, Saracen, Mila, Cego, Surelock, Fuhr, Yale, Fullex and Maco.

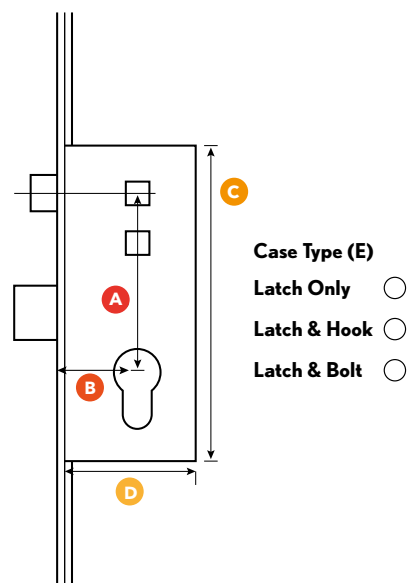

When identifying a gearbox for a upvc door the first measurements to take are the Centre A, and the backset B.

Measurement A is the Centre. This is the distance between the centre of the barrel and the center of the spindle.

Measurement B is the back set. That is the distance from the front of the locking system to the middle of the spindle. The most common are 35mm and 45mm. There are some other sizes on older door sections.

Look to see if there is a manufacturers name stamped anywhere on the strip this will also help ID the gearbox.

RETENTION OF TITLE

Title to goods supplied in any contract with H Davenport & Sons Ltd shall remain with the supplier until they have been paid for in full. In the event of non-payment for the goods, the recipient is required to allow the supplier, its employees or agents, irrevocable license to enter the premises where the goods are stored in order to repossess the goods.

Title to any goods supplied at any time in any contract with H Davenport & Sons Ltd shall remain with the supplier until all debts and obligations owed to us by the recipient have been settled in full. In the event of bankruptcy, insolvency, liquidation, legal judgment or non-payment of any debts or obligations owed to the supplier, the recipient is required to allow the supplier, its employees or agents, irrevocable license to enter the premises where the goods are stored in order to repossess the goods.

The goods must be stored and maintained in their original packaging in a re-saleable condition clearly identified as our property until title has passed to the recipient in full. The recipient is required to allow the supplier, its employees or agents, irrevocable license to enter the premises where the goods are stored in order to confirm compliance.

SPECIAL ORDERS

Goods are defined as "special order" if they are not included in our normal stock range, or they are subject to modification that renders them unsuitable for re-stocking.

Special orders cannot be cancelled and are non-returnable unless the goods are defective.

Special orders may be subject to carriage charges, even if placed with a carriage free stock order, and regardless of value. These carriage charges may be dictated by the policy of the supplier, and may be exceptional to our normal carriage terms.

Special orders must be priced at the time of ordering. No price query will be accepted after then.

We accept no liability whatsoever for extended or delayed delivery times for special orders.

RETURN OF GOODS

Applications for the return of goods must be directed to Head Office. A returns note will be issued to you if considered appropriate. No goods will be accepted for return without the corresponding returns note number.

All returns must be direct to Head Office. Returns must not be given to a third party, our representative or agent, unless authorised to do so by Head Office. Credit notes will not be issued until the goods are receipted back in our warehouse.

Replacements for incorrect or defective goods are invoiced to the recipient on despatch. Credit is issued for the corresponding returns when they are receipted back in our warehouse. Return postage at cost will be credited with the goods. Larger items will be collected by our carrier and returned at our expense. You are responsible for providing adequate packaging to ensure their safe return.

A handling charge will be applied to goods correctly supplied but not wanted, ordered incorrectly or duplicated by a "confirmation" order not clearly endorsed as such. The handling charge is at our discretion but will not be less than 20% of the original invoice value. You are responsible for all the costs incurred when returning goods in this category. The goods must be in their original packaging, otherwise an additional re-packing charge will apply. Adequate external packaging, to ensure their safe return, must be supplied by you.

Returns notes are valid for 14 days, after which no goods will be accepted for credit repair or replacement.

Goods to be returned as defective may be subject to inspection before the return is authorised. Return may be refused if in the opinion of us, our employee, agent, or independent third party expert, the goods are not defective or are fit for purpose or comply with current industry standards and conditions.
